1. I'll see what I can find out.
2. Photos are attached.
3. Sure. How about any or all of the following?

"We are pleased that the U.S. Government has at long last complied with the court order to return Mr. Al Rabiah to Kuwait. The court's opinion in his case is proof that his release is long overdue.

Mr. Al Rabiah is an innocent man. His complete innocence is clearly demonstrated in the trial court's decision, which the U. S. Government did not attempt to appeal. In fact, at the very outset of Mr. Al Rabiah's confinement, the United States' own expert intelligence analyst concluded Mr. Al Rabiah was an innocent man in the wrong place at the wrong time. Nonetheless, this innocent citizen of one of the United States' best allies was wrongfully imprisoned at Guantanamo Bay for almost eight years, during which he was tortured, abused, and coerced into making false confessions. We call upon President Obama to provide both a formal apology on behalf of the United States and appropriate compensation for Mr. Al Rabiah's ordeal. Mr. Al Rabiah can never reclaim the eight years he lost at Guantanamo Bay – and the United States must not simply turn and forget."

Or I'd be happy to talk to you and provide something else. I'm leaving for LA a little later today for depositions, but I'll be available on my cell phone.

Subject: three requests

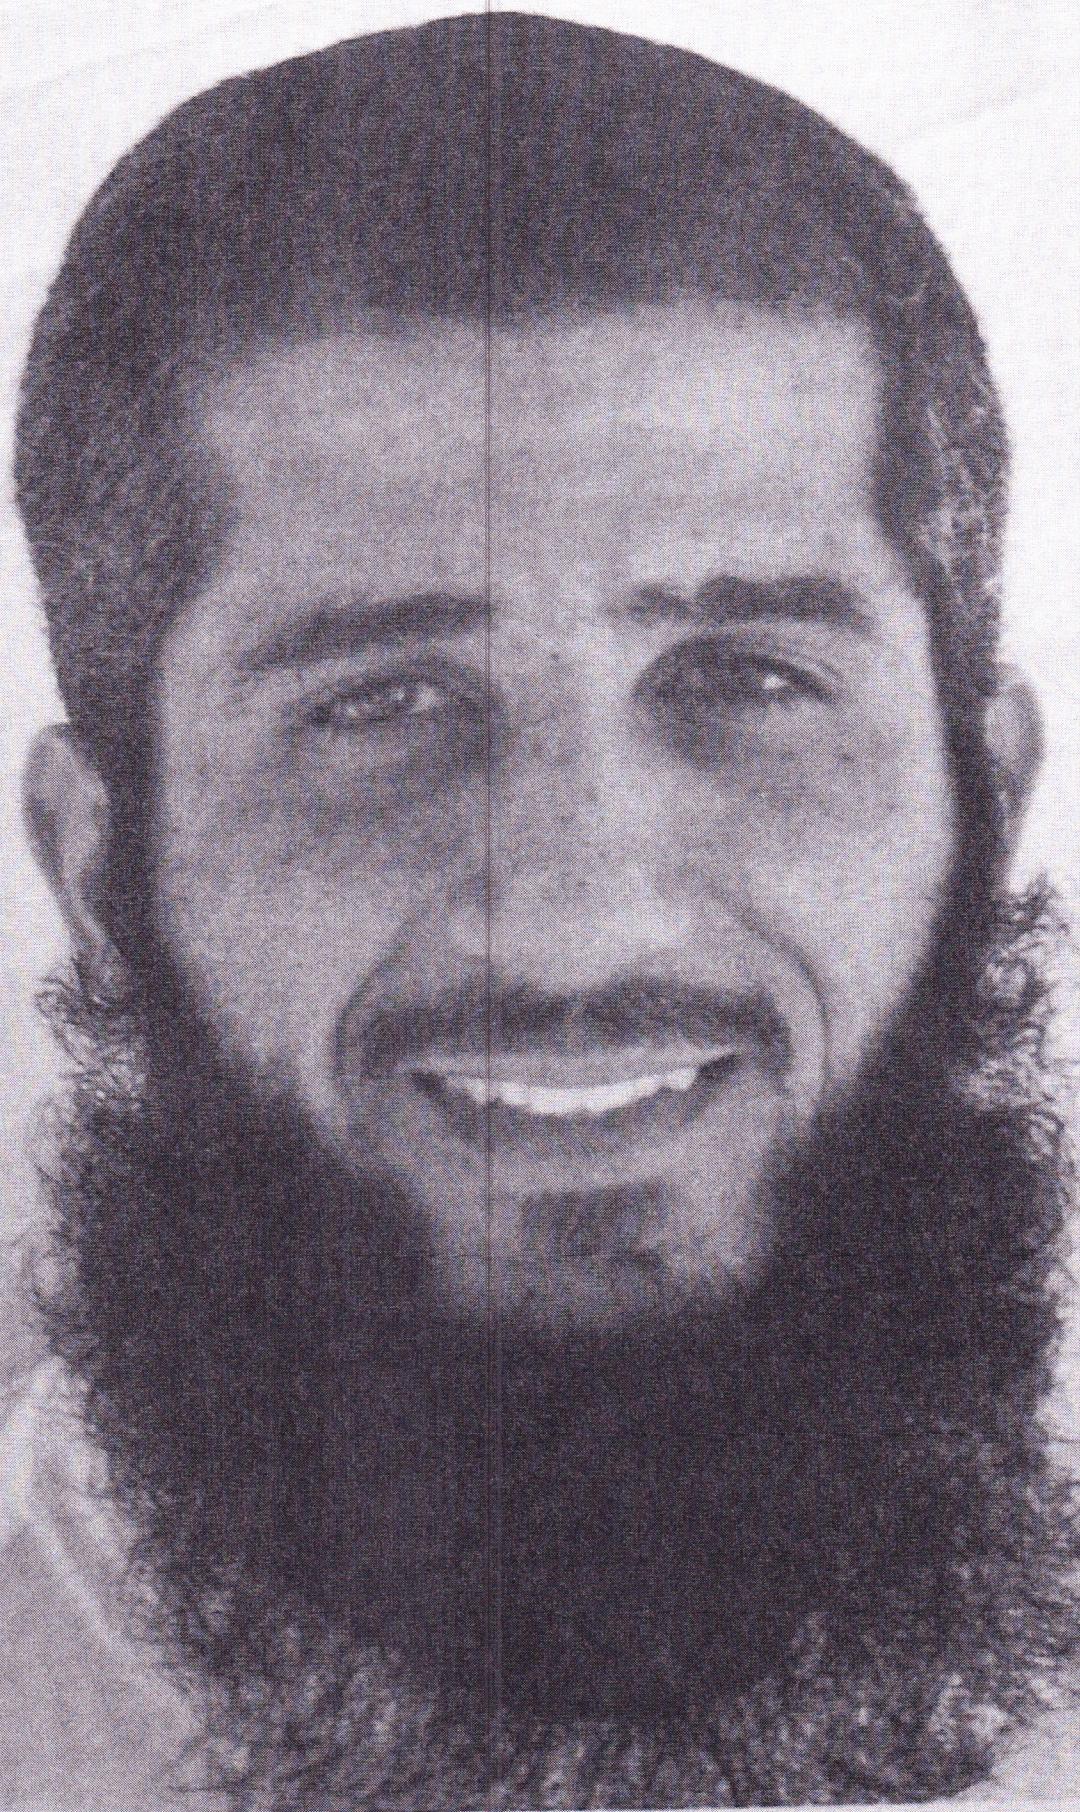

1. Can you ask around on whether indeed the Emir is sending his private jet for Mr. Rabia -- or, as happens, this is one of those Guantanamo legends. Either way, can you confirm that Kuwait is sending an aircraft?
2. You were going to provide me with an ICRC photo...

3. How about spending a few minutes on the phone this week to give me an embargoed quote for Fouad Goes Home story, which I would like to have ready in the can by Wednesday so we can push the button whenever?
